Part 2

Reading

Read the text and complete the questions 11–20 after it. There is an example for you.

It's the first children's expedition to Alaska!

James Bishop is traveling to Alaska with nineteen other boys to study wolves. James, who is twelve, has never been to Alaska before. The boys are going with two zoologists and some cameramen. They are going to the camp in the forest. The boy will follow wolves and study the hunting habits of the wolf. "It's the first children's expedition to Alaska!" James told a reporter.

A few months ago scientists found some interesting things in Alaska. They were the bones of early wolves. The boys are going to look for more bones of the pre-historic animals. Why is James going on the expedition? "I'm interested in history. And I've been to wild places lots of times before. But I don't know anything about wolves. I've never read any books about real ones - only the ones in fairy stories!"
